THE NEW PLAYS

John Drew Proves Himself Again in "Rosemary."

BY CHARLES DARTON.

SAY what you will of revivals, it is a genuine pleasure to see an American actor with a background. This is the pleasure that any one with a real fondness for the theatre must feel when John Drew steps feebly into the last act of "Rosemary" at the Empire Theatre as an old man with the lingering echoes of the song of youth in his heart.

If you are one of those who stubbornly insist that John Drew is "always himself," you should, out of justice to yourself as well as to him, see this instinctively fine actor when he overtakes him in the closing act of the fragrant little play by Louis N. Parker and Murray Carson that Charles Frohman has brought back to life. Don't bother your head with memories of Maude Adams in her first fling toward fame nor Ethel Barrymore when she acted as a serving maid. Give all you have to give to the stage in keen appreciation of Mr. Drew as an artist in the last act, for here you have work that can be compared only with that of the late Richard Mansfield in the final scene of "Beau Brummel." You may well take off your hat to it after you have left the theatre.

We are more than kind to English actors with traditions. But what about our own? John Drew is now doing what John Hare might have done years ago, but I doubt whether Mr. Hare, in his palmy days, could have equalled the gentle, human characterization with which Mr. Drew rounds off his performance. That's for remembrance, as the authors of "Rosemary" say, and it is to be hoped that John Drew will be remembered for his dying day for the last glimpse he gives of Sir Jasper Thorndyke. Smile as much as we may at sentiment, most of us go to the theatre down in our hearts there is something that seeks expression, and if it comes with a catch in the breath or a lump in the throat, so much the better. We

CALOMEL SALIVATES

Calomel makes you sick and you lose a day's work. Calomel is a nasty, dangerous chemical. To have your sluggish liver and bowels when you are healthy, headachy, bilious, just get a 10-cent box of harmless Cascarets. They work while you sleep, don't grip, sicken or salivate. Advrt.
